

Project Give Back Reflections

Project Give Back has taught me a lot this year, from the first day I knew it would be something for me. I really enjoy the process of giving back. I'm always happy to give, donate, or raise money for charities. (Even if it's not money) With Project Give Back I've learned so much more than I knew before. First of all I learned how to call a charity for information, which I'd never done before.

Second of all I learned how to make those lovely "Fruggles." (I have at least 20 of them at home) And third of all I learned how to fully open my heart and hear the voices of the people (and animals too!) calling for my help. It was an amazing experience hearing all about other charities that are important to the people who chose them. Mostly, I enjoyed the experience of putting together such a life-changing project on a charity of my choice.

I loved the sight and sound of people opening their hearts to charity. I have changed as a person doing this. Project Give Back has inspired me to try even harder to make a change in this world and, that's just what I'll do! I'll always (and I mean always) be able to look back on this and remember the way I love helping the world when I have the chance!

Everyone should have the opportunity to participate in Project Give Back because the world needs our help! One does not need a microphone to speak up. But the world calling needs to be heard! Thank you Project Give Back for giving me the inspiration to give the world around me another look.
