

Reflections on Project Give Back

During Project Give Back, I learned about the Jays Care Foundation. For my presentation, I made a power point and a board display. My event was a Homerun Derby. In class one day, I volunteered to participate so I could help Amy. The two of us practiced a phone call in front of the class and Amy asked me to make a mistake, so the class could learn something from my mistake.

I was the first person in my class to present my charity and event. I was not nervous and I hoped my class would like it. My dad came to help by pitching in my event. I was so impressed with my presentation.

I think it was important to participate in Project Give Back because I learned all about my charity and 13 other charities. I had fun with all of the other events. The most important thing I learned is to "give back". It's about helping people.
